Mrs, Ellen White. Called to her home above,

Another dear one hies; Winged by Faith and Love Her spirit mounts the skies. Her life-work here well done, Her exile's course is o'er; Radiant 'fore the throne, The cross that weighed her down And were her life away, Becomes a victor's crown And makes her glorious day. No more the tears are shed Fond memory taught to flow, Recalling loved one's dead, In the days of long ago. Nor more escapes the sigh, Alas! too often heard.
Where Grief's spasmodic cry
Disrupts the tender chord.
Nor more with sense distraught She vigils in her dole. For Love hath valiance wrough And freed her grief-rent soul. A life o'ercast with gloom, Eclipsed in murky night.
Emerges from the tomb
A star divinely bright.
A gracious beacon ray
That glows amid the gloom. That gaves ammut the groom, Attracting steps estray

To bowers of halcyon bloom.

While springtide's joy is full,
And Hope acclaims the spheres,
The soul, "at rest," may cull

The harvest of the years,
Be this our vista fair, And ever heavenward tend.
